Svensk Filmindustri 1950s films are sometimes overshadowed by the iconic cinema of the 1960s and 70s. However, it would be a mistake to assume that the 1950s were not tremendously important films. In 1950s cinema, there were significant developments, such as the rise in popularity of global cinema, new approaches to acting and narrative storytelling, and the rise of groundbreaking directors such as Billy Wilder, Alfred Hitchcock and John Ford. In chronological order by release date, the following list includes the most important films (though not the best) released in the 1950s. In the late 1940s, Walt Disney needed a hit movie. For ten years, his studio was losing money. Some films were below expectations (Fantasia and Pinocchio original releases) and Disney had spent significant time and resources making films for the US government during and after World War II. However, the animated classic Cinderella proved to be such a huge success as the studio's fortunes were recorded and provided a cute template for many of Disney's successive animated classics. Without Cinderella, Disney would never have recovered. Daiei Motion Picture Company Japanese filmmaker Akira Kurosawa's Rashomon is groundbreaking for the way her narrative is built. A single crime is told in a trial setting from four separate perspectives, each contradictory and up to interpretation. After winning the Golden Lion and Honorary Academy Award at the Venice Film Festival, Rashomon brought new applause to Japanese cinema. Kurosawa continued to make masterpieces such as Ikiru (1952), Seven Samurai (1954), Throne of Blood (1957) and The Hidden Fortress (1958) in the 1950s. Paramount Pictures After decades of praising hollywood splendor, Billy Wilder's Sunset Boulevard was one of the first films in the film industry to pull back the curtain. Reclusive silent period star Norma Desmond (Gloria Swanson), now fifty, plots her return to the big screen when down-on-his-luck screenwriter Joe Gillis (William Holden) stumbles upon her aging real estate. Gillis gradually learns about Desmond's obsession with youth and stardom and how leaving him affects his mental health. Sunset Boulevard became one of the highest-grossing films of the year and changed public perception of hollywood's glamorous world. Like 20th Century Fox Very Sunset Boulevard, All About Eve looks at ageism and obsession in the entertainment industry. Hollywood icon Bette Davis stars as a Broadway actress looking back at the end of her career as she struggles against a young raon. All About Eve set a record with 14 Oscar nominations and won six. But the effect was reaching even more, because before All About Eve, several actresses over forty were offered lead roles in movies. Like Sunset Boulevard, All About Eve showed there is a place for mature roles women on screen. Warner Bros. Pictures In the early 1950s, fresh-faced Broadway actor Marlon Brando dominated, whose natural acting style inspired countless artists. After playing Stanley Kowalski in Tennessee Williams' A Streetcar Named Desire, Brando reprised the role in the film adaptation of Elia Kazan (also directed by the original Broadway production). Brando's work introduced much of the public to a new style of acting that would later become synonymous with actors such as James Dean, Al Pacino and Robert De Niro. Brando and Kazan would then work together again in 1954 in On the Waterfront, another groundbreaking film of the decade. Speaking pictures since MGM first became popular in the early 1920s, Hollywood embraced the musical parade. One of the biggest musicals of the decade is Singin' in the Rain, which also features actors transitioning from silent films to sound features. Gene Kelly's iconic dance sequence is one of the most memorable scenes in Hollywood history as she sings the title song. United Artists Hollywood developed as an allegory for the ongoing Red Scare, in which Communist sympathizers are targeted as a hotbed - a West starring Gary Cooper as a small-town marshal who stands alone against a revenge-seeking bandit on his way to high noon town. One by one, the townspeople he's protecting are moving away from him when he needs to. High Noon was one of the first revisionist Westerns, and the almost real-time narrative was rarely a storytelling device used in pre-film. In the 1950s, 20th Century Fox worked many tricks to combat declining audiences in theaters, including the use of Hollywood 3D filmmaking. Another strategy was to increase the size of the screen, especially as a way to combat the growing popularity of television. The first film presented on the Bathrobe CinemaScope was soon standard across the industry widescreen process (and continues today). The Robe's widescreen show led to huge box office success and helped resod interest in Biblical epics for a decade, including the Ten Commandments (1956) and Ben-Hur (1959). Japanese filmmakers such as Toho Film Company Ltd Akira Kurosawa made films considered art films for Japanese studio Toho, while the studio was releasing more entertainment-oriented projects. The biggest of these films was Gogira (better known as Godzilla), a sci-fi film about a large reptile monster that attacks Tokyo. Godzilla is one of the many sci-fi films of the decade to explore the dangers of the atomic age. Despite being overshadowed by today's special effects, the miniature effects of Godzilla were groundbreaking and effective. Godzilla, its many sequels, and even more numerous imitators continue to be released today, and Godzilla remains one of the most well-so-well-seen pop culture characters in the world. Warner Bros. Pictures In the mid-1950s, John Wayne had played hero cowboys on screen for a quarter of a century with many of his best films directed by John Ford. In The Searchers, Ford and Wayne tell the story of a very different kind of cowboy: Ethan Edwards, a conflicted former Confederate soldier who is murdered by his parents Comanche and his young nephew. Obsessing Edwards becomes increasingly desperate as he spends years searching, and viewers wonder how he'll react if he finds her. Dark story, amazing cinematography and Wayne make a famous film in his best search. Svensk Filmindustri Hollywood films dominated cinemas worldwide throughout World War II, but in the 1950s filmmakers from around the world began gaining international attention for their work. One of the greatest directors in Europe at the time was Swedish filmmaker Ingmar Bergman. Bergman's first major international achievement was the Seventh Seal, which stunged a knight who faced the personification of Death during the Black Plague. The images presented in the Seventh Seal remain iconic decades later. Bergman published a second highly respected film in the same year, Wild Strawberries. Warner Bros. Pictures Moved from universal pictures horror films years later, British film studio Hammer Film Productions revived the creature feature film with colorfully produced lean, gothic-inspired loose remakes of Universal's most popular monsters. The first was The Curse of Frankenstein, starring Christopher Lee as the Creature and Peter Cushing as Victor Frankenstein. The two have appeared together in several Hammer horror films, and Frankenstein's international success continues to influence horror filmmakers. United Artists Stanley Kubrick is remembered as one of the greatest filmmakers in history. The 1957 film Paths of Glory, starring Kirk Douglas as a World War I French military leader defending soldiers who refuse to attempt a suicidal advance against German forces, offered a very different perspective than the typical Hollywood war movie. The anti-war themes in the film were rare for post-World War II society, and its uniqueness prepared Kubrick for his breakthrough career as a filmmaker. Paramount Pictures Ingenious director Alfred Hitchcock made a series of masterpieces in the 1950s - Stranger on a Train (1951), Rear Window (1954) and North by Northwest (1959), to name a few - who may initially be the under-appreciated Master of Vertigo Decade Thriller's crowning achievement. James Stewart, Hitchcock's frequent businessman, plays a detective who is forced to retire because he suffers from dizziness. As a private investigator, he is hired to track a mysterious woman in a complex murder plot. Vertigo's obsession theme continues to engage and confuse viewers, and the revolutionary use of camera techniques is often imitated even today. United Artists Comedy movies new topics One of these reconnaissance events of the 1950s is Some Like It Hot. The film stars Tony Curtis and Jack Lemmon as witnesses to a murder disguised as a woman to avoid capture by the perpetrators. Cross-dressing comedy time was considered extremely superior, and Some Like It Hot (perhaps his last major role along with director Billy Wilder and co-star Marilyn Monroe) helped usher in the groundbreaking comedy of the 1960s by pushing envelopes in the late 1950s.
